I have two children: Child 1, Child 2 Each child has its own parent: Parent 1, Parent 2. Parent 1, Child 1, Child 2 Parent 2, Child 1, Child 2 What would be an efficient way to say, "In the database, assign each child to a parent?" One way could be to say assign each child to either parent with equal probability, but I'm not sure how to implement that in SQL. Parent 1 Child 1 and Parent 2 Child 1 make up the class Car, for example, but the database is (was) MySQL. Edit: I'm not sure why, but I originally asked how to assign each child to either parent 1 or parent 2. I think I was confused with assigning a child to a class, and didn't realize it was also possible in one of the answers. Thanks everyone, much appreciated. A: If I understand the question correctly then what you have is Parent A, Child A, Parent B, and Child B. Child A is of type Parent A, and Child B is of type Parent B. If that is the case what you need is a junction table
