Recently, a so-called multifunction peripheral (MFP) that combines the functions of a copier, a printer, a scanner, a facsimile, and the like has been implemented as a device included in an office. Along with the spread of such an MFP, the MFP has been connected to the Internet so that various services can be used via the Internet. The MFP has a function of outputting electronic mail (EM) to a recipient. In addition, the MFP can perform printing (hereinafter, "mail printing") by transmitting an image file (print job) as an attachment to electronic mail. The MFP can also perform an E-mail/printing service that carries out a print job described in a print request (print request data) received from a terminal and provides a print result. In general, a print server that has the E-mail/printing function is provided in the MFP or a LAN (local area network) to which the MFP is connected. There has been known a technology for performing two-sided printing (two-sided printing) using a printer or a copier (refer to, e.g., Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2002-170581). If two-sided printing is performed using the technology disclosed in Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2002-170581, it is necessary for the MFP to transmit print data (print request data) to the print server. In addition, the MFP carries out control for storing a print result (hereinafter, "printed matter") in a printing unit. In recent years, a print job received from a terminal in an office is often in the form of a PDF file (portable document format) (see, e.g., Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2003-161947). Therefore, for example, it is possible to request the print server to print an original PDF
