

Dec 4, 2018 The Baltic Countries DLC is a huge expansion pack, containing many new towns and cities. A lot of the map features live up to the name of being beyond the Baltic Sea. Dec 15, 2018 The Baltic Countries DLC has been just as good as I expected it to be. It was better than I expected it to be, and I was getting pretty worried that the new Baltic Roads DLC would take a bit of the fun out of ETS2. Aug 12, 2019 The Baltic Countries DLC has been fantastic. It has actually been the best of the five map expansion DLCs for ETS2 that I have played. Q: What is the difference between a disc and a craft in the Pathfinder rules? In the rules there are two types of vehicles, vehicles and crafts. A vehicle has a vehicle frame, but also a driver and maybe seats. They are mounted on a vehicle frame, so they are always visible. A crafts is able to move around freely, so it has a vehicle frame, but not a driver. It is also not able to carry anything, so it doesn't have a seat. A crafts is not visible if it moves far away from the point where it was created, so the players don't need to look everywhere to find it. What is the difference between a disc and a craft in the rules? They have the same stat block and the same prices. A: Disclaimer: I haven't run a Pathfinder game in awhile, so I can't recall how the rules have changed. Also, the information below is all based off my opinion of how the rules should have worked. The "vehicle" rules were largely copied straight from the 3.5 rules. Their stats are still there, and the rules still describe vehicles as vehicles and crafts as crafts. However, it's possible that they've been reflavored to compensate for the changes introduced by Pathfinder. The "craft" rules were not in the 3.5 rules. They are not part of the 3.5 Craft ruleset (that probably explains why there's no equivalent of 3.5's "craft" rules); they are in the "Advanced rules" section (which made me laugh the first time I saw it). The craft rules say A craft is able to move around freely, so it has a vehicle frame. [...] and [A crafts] has a vehicle frame, but
