A diverse panel of professionals examines the ethical and moral questions students face in an online environment. PART I: Following years of college and career experience, I am again find myself in a new stage of life. Of course, by now I have read widely on a variety of academic topics and have begun to grapple with important questions of moral and ethical responsibility. As I look ahead, I am increasingly concerned that the way we interact with each other, our society and the planet in which we live are not conducive to a healthy future for our children and for generations to come. Ethics Beyond High School – Academic Ethics and Internet Use The world we live in is inextricably linked to the Internet and technology. Many studies have shown that a growing percentage of people rely on online resources for everything from news to job opportunities. Partnership for 21st Century Skills: Identifying Skills in the Next Generation of Learners We face the challenge of educating students with a variety of strengths, interests, and learning styles, and we must also navigate through a new educational environment that is rapidly changing. The new assessment system requires us to reexamine what we know about academic achievement. During this "new" era, our students are expected to take on the challenges of a global, interconnected world while simultaneously maintaining proficiency in core content areas. The Changing Face of the Classroom The classroom is the most familiar setting in which students interact with one another. Now, however, students communicate face to face and simultaneously via the Internet and the classroom becomes converging with this non-face to face environment. We are reexamining the traditional method of learning, which places emphasis on the acquisition of facts and the memorization of information. What has been lost in the move to a technologically enabled teaching-learning environment are the interpersonal skills, communication abilities, and problem- solving skills that are essential for future success in today's global economy. A New Paradigm for the Classroom While face-to-face teaching remains the cornerstone of a well-rounded, learning environment, we must also recognize and address the fact that students spend many, many hours online in the face of heavy Internet usage. In an effort to prepare students for the 21st century, we are working to develop a new paradigm for classroom practices that embraces technology but not at the expense 77a5ca646e
