The present invention relates to a system and method for reducing radiant and conductive heat transfer across the width of a print media, such as paper, both prior to and during a printing process. For many years, the image/text of an information bearing medium was developed by sequentially placing several small discrete points of colorant (e.g., ink or toner) on the medium in the transverse direction. In the case of photocopiers, a laser beam is modulated by the image of an original to produce a latent image, which then is developed. More recently, the development of electrophotographic (EP) printers has become prevalent for home, office and commercial printing. An EP printer utilizes small discrete droplets of ink or toner to deposit on a charged surface. The droplets are placed on selected areas of the medium in such a manner as to reproduce the original. EP printers have advantages over many other types of printers, including scanning laser printers, inkjet printers, and pen-type ink-addressed printers. One advantage is that higher resolution printers are possible since there is no need to raster scan the original. Another advantage is that multiple copies of the same image can be made without having to make multiple passes over the medium. Due to the fact that EP printing does not require mechanical movement, the printing speed is higher than in other printers. For example, laser printers operate at a speed ranging from about 40 to about 70 pages per minute. Unfortunately, one of the drawbacks of EP printers is the inability to print to roll paper due to the inefficiency of the printing process. Since the printing process may take, for example, up to about 80 seconds for a document of ten inches wide to have approximately thirty lines of data, it can be seen that the speed of the printer is limited by the printing process. The present invention relates to a method of printing to a medium that is wider than the length of a belt, using an electrophotographic (EP) printer. More specifically, the present invention relates to a method of printing to a medium that is wider than the length of a belt, using an electrophotographic (EP) printer, the method comprising the steps of: (1) providing a belt; (2) printing a first portion of a first document to the belt in a first direction; (3) forming a first image on the belt; (4) printing a second portion of a second document to the belt in a second

What's New in the?

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a device to dry a disk (CD, DVD, etc.), which device includes a drying stand for the disk, an air blow unit to blow air on a side of the disk, and a blower unit to supply air to the drying stand. 2. Description of the Prior Art Generally, there are provided a stand to fix a disk, an air blow unit which is movably provided above the stand to blow air on a side of the disk, and a blower unit which is movably provided below the stand and behind the air blow unit to supply air to the air blow unit. However, there are problems that the blower unit and the air blow unit are relatively big and heavy, and the configuration is complicated in that these units are connected by wirings. Flavonoid composition, antioxidant activity and In vitro anti-obesity potential of Andira inermis. Andira inermis (A. inermis) is a plant widely found in the south of Brazil, associated with animals such as rodents, and is used traditionally as an animal repellent, and as an antiseptic and for the treatment of snakebites. In this context, the purpose of this study was to evaluate the antioxidant activity of andiranin, an apigenin-type flavonoid isolated from A. inermis, and the anticancer potential against 3T3-L1 adipocytes and HCT 116 human colon cancer cells. The results of this study demonstrated that the ethanolic extract of A. inermis demonstrated remarkable antioxidant activity and anti-adipogenic activity. The antioxidant activity of the extract was confirmed by measuring its ability to scavenge 2,2-diphenyl-1-picrylhydrazyl (DPPH) and superoxide anions radicals, and the anti-adipogenic activity was evidenced by the inhibition of proliferation of 3T3-L1 adipocytes, and the in vivo anti-proliferative and pro-apoptotic effects were demonstrated by the inhibition of the incorporation of 5-bromo-2-deoxyuridine (BrdU) into cellular DNA, together with the induction of apoptosis in 3T3-L1 adipocytes. Additionally, an andiranin-enriched fraction (AEF) exhibited no cytotoxic activity against a panel of seven cancer cell lines. The results of the in vitro
