If we look at the crime scene, we find that the transections to the head are far more severe than the other wounds. We find that the victim was struck by a blunt object at least seven times. The blows were delivered by two weapons. We also see traces of an attempt to destroy the evidence, with the butchery and the severing of the limb. We find the impression of the edge of a circular object that was apparently used to mince the body. I also found a fragment of a metal object that must have been used to transfer energy to the torso and the head. The pathologist could not find any traces of a sexual assault. And we found no traces of the weapon used in the attack. This means that there is no trace of the weapon itself in the body, at least not where we can observe it. INTERROGATION OF LEYDON Again, we come back to the interrogation. The suspect said, "I'm sorry I hit her, but I had to. She was out of line." When I interviewed him again after the trial, the suspect said, "Well, I didn't hit her, but I did stop her. I was afraid she was going to strike me." And he added, "You know, I might have killed her. I didn't mean to. But I was afraid she was going to kill me. I was terrified. I was completely crazy. I was upset. I was never like this before." When I looked at his face, his expression was that of a man who had just been told the worst news of his life. And I asked him, "What happened to your wife? What really happened to your wife?" He replied, "She just died. It's not true. It's not true. I was distraught. I was crazy. She died in a hospital 77a5ca646e
