When you first boot up the program, you'll be asked whether you want to allow or disallow external access to the Dare. The default is Allow access. If you use an external CD drive, you should select Disallow access to help prevent it from messing with the internal drive. If you use the web, or a laptop without a CD drive, you should select Disallow access to help prevent it from messing with the internal drive. If you select Allow access, the program will go through all your mp3s and scan them for ID3 tags. If it can't find album art, it will attempt to retrieve it from amazon. If the program does not find a tracklist for an album in your folder, it will make one. Once the scan is complete, it will prompt you to name all your albums with consistent names. This is how the program will display your music for you in the future. When you have finished naming your albums, you'll be prompted to select the songs you wish to edit. The program will ask you to set the correct rating for each track. You can also change the track length, and the year the songs were recorded.

When you're finished, you'll be prompted to select the songs you want to move into the correct folder. If you choose to move the song(s) to a different folder, the program will ask you where to move them to. When you choose to save the files, the program will ask you for a location where to save the files. It will also ask you if you want to create a new folder for the music. If you're done, you'll be prompted to Save the files. When you want to start playing the songs on the Dare, you'll be prompted to choose the folder. You can use the browse function to select the folder on
