The current study can serve as a model example for the use of phenotypic analysis on multiple media. Biofilms are dynamic systems in which gene expression and behaviour change according to environmental conditions \[[@CR23]\]. The ability to culture \*P. aeruginosa\* biofilms in vitro could be a significant help in understanding the mechanisms of antimicrobial resistance in \*P. aeruginosa\* biofilms. It is particularly important to characterize the transcriptome of \*P. aeruginosa\* biofilms to identify the genes involved in causing this increased antimicrobial resistance, and the mechanisms involved. Conclusion {#Sec12} ===== In this study, we demonstrated that we can successfully culture \*P. aeruginosa\* biofilms on QCM chips, and that we can use these biofilms to track the effect of media on antimicrobial activity over time. Therefore, we can use QCM chips as a method to observe the effect of media on \*P. aeruginosa\* biofilms, which can aid in the development of a better understanding of antimicrobial resistance during biofilm formation. Methods {#Sec13} ===== Bacterial strains, media, and growth conditions {#Sec14} ----- \*Pseudomonas aeruginosa\* strains 887 and 887-9G were cultured overnight in 3 % tryptone broth containing 0.3 % yeast extract (Difco, Detroit, MI, USA) (T3Y). Cultures were adjusted to an OD~600~ of 1.0 ( $10^8$  CFU/ml) in T3Y, and were incubated for 1 h at 37 °C with shaking at 180 rpm. Cells were then pelleted by centrifugation (5 min at  $3000\times g$ ) and re-suspended in T3Y or different media: Brain heart infusion media 1cb139a0ed
