which 4 could not be histologically proven to be melanoma, and discuss the problems posed by this diagnosis in the absence of histological proof. The subject of this paper is not to report the diagnostic pitfalls of the different imaging modalities (X-ray, CT and ultrasound) but to stress the fact that melanoma can appear identical to other teratoma-like tumours of the fetus. Histological examination of the tumour is fundamental but has limitations. Ultrasound and other imaging techniques are useful in identifying where the tumour is localised, but cannot prove or rule out the diagnosis of melanoma
