Trevor Bayliss insists England must not be lulled into a false sense of security before the next Ashes campaign despite their impeccable record at the moment. Stuart Broad's first century in the series against Australia will leave the hosts 77 runs behind with three remaining on a dry pitch at Edgbaston, however the tourists are now staring at the prospect of a fifth straight series win. There has been a belief that the World Cup, which England won in the summer, has given the hosts a certain quality that has allowed them to build a remarkable record of 36 wins, three losses and no draws in their seven Tests since 2015. While the No1-ranked side are 20 points ahead of Australia and 10 points clear of the unassailable India, it is not something that Bayliss has been forced to address in a pre-series media interview and he says England's form needs to remain fluid to maintain their position in the top four. "Well, I don't think there's any point in getting carried away," Bayliss said. "It's not as if we are blowing the opposition away – they're really a very good side as well – so it's not as though we are being completely at ease with ourselves. "But as we look to the next period of time, I think we don't want to go into the next period thinking there is nothing to worry about because as we saw just in the last week or so, South Africa can come up with a good team and win a Test match. "And in my experience, no matter how good you are, if you get into your comfort zone, I think you have the potential to become very complacent. And I think that's the danger in there. "So, we don't want to overplay the side that's going to come after us because I don't think that it's very good for our side to know that we can be in trouble because of complacency and we don't want to go into any period of time believing that the game is theirs." The England coach insists there has not been a change in approach and their refusal to let a step-up in opposition produce a step-back in performance will remain the same. England's players celebrate the 2013
