Q: Ripple effect on ListView items I have ListView in my App, and I want to have some changes on it's items, I know it is possible to make ripple effect. But I have several items in the list, and every time, when I touch one of the items, the ripple effect affect another item(for example, if there is 1 item, then now I have 2), and I think if I touch next item, the ripple effect changes position, and if I touch the first item, the ripple effect changes 2 items... So my question is how can I have these ripple effects on the items in my list? Thanks. A: What you want to do is to use ripple "on-top" effect for the items of the list. You can achieve this with some help of android:layout_alignTop="@+id/activity_main" where "@+id/activity_main" is the id of your ListView.

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.5)?

Our innovative bill of rights for the Internet aims to stop governments interfering with the Internet Britain's largest trade union is joining with the head of the UK's largest Internet service provider, whose members include thousands of retail shop assistants, to launch an Internet bill of rights calling for the government to take on board the vast majority of people who view the Internet as a right, not a privilege. The launch of a trade union and Internet service provider alliance backing 'an Internet bill of rights' comes at a critical time for public rights in the digital age, as governments around the world are considering proposals to restrict access to online information or services or to restrict the flow of information to specific regions, or groups of people. It is understood that participants at the launch of the alliance in central London on Tuesday will also outline plans for a campaign to press the Government to drop proposals for censorship, including plans to filter the Internet and force ISPs to keep records of user activity. Geoff Taylor, of Unite, the country's biggest union with more than a million members, told The Guardian newspaper: "We have the greatest communications infrastructure in the world, but we also have a Bill of Rights, and it's time that right was applied to the Internet." Unite's involvement with the new campaign has been welcomed by consumer groups and civil libertarians who have long campaigned for stronger online rights and who say that the internet is quickly becoming a fundamental part of everyday life for many people in developed countries, as well as for those in poorer parts of the world. The coalition is being supported by several of Britain's leading ISPs including BT, BT Vision, Sky and Virgin Media, who will give their backing to a Digital Rights Manifesto, being launched at the same event. It will state that the government has a responsibility to ensure the safety and security of all people on the Internet, but also to respect users' privacy, and to ensure all users have equal access to the information and communications infrastructure. "The Internet is simply a public facility, just like a library, a telephone box, or a park. As such, it must be seen by the government to be and treated as a democratic public service, with universal access and protections for all its users," said Taylor. "By this the Internet Bill of Rights (IBO) supports those who are behind the very backbone of the Internet. We stand for free and open access for all. And we're proud to be joining forces with everyone in the UK to
